Which application should I file? When should I file?

Students from mixed-status families can complete a FAFSA to be evaluated for all federal, state, and UC-funded aid. However, we acknowledge the concerns you and your family may have regarding information protection. Students from mixed-status families that complete a CADAA will be evaluated for all state and UC-funded aid.

If you are part of a mixed-status family, it's important to consider the potential risks and benefits of completing the FAFSA. While the Higher Education Act prohibits the use of FAFSA data for immigration Commented [EY1]: I suggest sticking with their language - it's a small difference but the "will not" seems a stronger statement than "does not," which describes only current practice.

enforcement, we understand your concerns about privacy. We have listed some factors to consider when weighing the potential privacy risk of completing a FAFSA.

Factors to consider:

- ✓ Federal Tax Returns: If an undocumented family member has filed federal taxes, then the federal government has access to their information.
- ✓ Previous FAFSA Submissions: Past FAFSA submissions may be accessible to federal authorities.
- ✓ Immigration History: Any history of deportation or DACA applications contain data that can be used to identify undocumented immigrants.

Should your family have submitted this information in the past, it may continue to be accessible to those same government agencies. Submission of a FAFSA in this case, may not increase the information that is already accessible to the federal government. However, if your family has not had any data exchanged in these or other spaces, then submission of a FAFSA may present new information on the status of your family.

Every student and family has different circumstances and considerations that factor into how you will pursue financial aid. We strongly recommend that you and your family hold these discussions to determine the best pathway forward for your situation.
